With the official count from all the 114 counties and the city of St. Louis complete, Mr. Major had a plurality of 2,513 votes over W. S. Cowherd, and ernor of Missouri. The formal canvass of the entire vote by the secretary of state will begin in Jefferson City this week. Inaccuracies in the count may appear, but it is regarded as highly improbable that any such discrepancy could wipe out the plurality now indicated for the attorney general.

Major carried ninety counties, and Cowherd is credited with majorities in only twenty counties. Cowherd did not run so well in the country as four years ago.

The rain of Monday morning did not harm and not a single tent leaked. The big tent withstood all the wind.

Rev. Bishop S. C. Partridge of Kansas City addressed a large audience at the Chautauqua Sunday afternoon.

His lecture, "Life Among the Chinese," was not only the first lecture of the season, but it was the first time that Bishop Partridge ever spoke at a Chautaugua.

The lecture was original in every respect. Bishop Partridge went outside the beaten pathways of stories of travel and history to tell of the intimate, personal happenings in the lives of the Chinese which are very seldom heard of by outsiders.

To begin with, Bishop Partridge said that of the 400,000,000 Chinese not one of them knows of or has ever heard of China. The name is unknown to them and untranslatable into their tongue. because of the fact that they have no proper nouns in their language. Every name means something, and the Chinese call their country the Middle Kingdom. In naming foreign countries the Chinese take the first syllable of the name and substitute for it the like that syllable. Thus England is lumber to build his house from Savan- called the Flourishing Land, America nah, there being no ratiroad accom- the Beautiful Land, and by the same modations. Pidgin English is the business language of the Chinese with the English. The name Pidgin is the result of Chinaman's attempt to pronounce the English word "business." The language is Chinese in structure, Portugese and English in phraseology; and when a Chinaman wishes to say a ship runs between two ports, he says it walks, for he reasons that it would not do the latter.

Bishop Partridge said that there was no real social life among the Chinese. the men and women remaining separated from each other nearly all of the time. What social life they have centers around weddings and funerals. These two events are called by the same name, which in English is "the happy occasion." Colors are used to distinguish between the two, red being used for weddings and white for fu-

These two events are the occasions for family reunions, feasting and the accumulation of debts. The Chinese spend the greater part of their lives trying to pay off the old ancestral debts due to the funerals of the former members of the family.

Bishop Partridge described the Chinese wedding rather minutely, at the same time saying the topic was inexsame time saying the topic was inex-haustable. Among other things he told of the ceremony which lasts for sex of the ceremony, which lasts for seventy-two hours; of the tense dramatic and often tragic situations in those LONG LIST OF REDUCTIONS IN weddings, where the bride and groom see each other for the first time after the ceremony is over, and of the wedding presents, which consist of nothing but cash, which is used to pay the expenses of the wedding.

The Chinese do not look at death as we do. They consider their dead as still a part of the family. They be lieve that the body contains three souls, one of which goes to the spirit world, another to the ancestral tablet, and the last stays in the coffin or "long life box," and walks at night. After the body is put in the coffin, which is made of a tree trunk, it is left in the house for from one week to three years. In fact, it is not allowed to be taken away from the house if the family owes any rent.

These caskets are not buried in the ground, but are enclosed in small brick or wooden houses. The Chinese believe that the spirit can pass through wood but not through brick, so in the brick houses a hole in the shape of the word "spirit" is made, through which the spirit goes every night. It is very necessary that the spirit be back before daylight. This fact furnishes a method for the carrying on of family feuds. One family will go to the burial place of the other and fill the hole in the little houses with mortar, shutting the spirit in. The enraged spirit then brings all manner of bad luck on its own family. If the cause is discovered the case is finally brought before the magistrate and settled.

Dr. Robert Parker Miles, newspaper man, magazine writer, lecturer and Presbyterian minister of New York City, held a splendid audience Sunday night in a splendid way. His lecture on "Tallow Dips" was a perfect piece of dramatic literature, and was presented with the fine action it demanded and received.

Dr. Miles was led to use the title of 'Tallow Dipe" for his lecture by a visit to the home of a friend on the Hudson. This friend let him into his garret, where he browsed around in delight among the old things there, and his mind lived for awhile with the people who had used them. Among the old things was a candlestick with a small piece of a tailow dip in it, where it had been snuffed out, and it reminded him of what his old schoolmaster in England said to him and his classmates, when they were small

"You are like tallow dips in a candlestick. If you make your lives of any account to the world you must burn and burn to the very socket."

There is no easy way to eminence, and those who win such a place sweat the most," the speaker said. He mentioned in rapid succession the names of many "Tallow Dips" who had in all ages made worthy names, speaking of the Nazarene as "The Great Light of the World "

Dr. Miles then proceeded to delineate the characters of several men England and in Rome, and dramatized his meeting with them in such heausubstitutes a Chinese name in place tiful, vivid language and delightful ease and grace of action, that there was really nothing lacking in the may be called, having occurred at various times in his life as newspaper man, magazine writer, minister and lecturer. The first character was that of Thomas A. Eddison, who works so long and so hard that he rarely thinks of his personal appearance, and who told Dr. Miles that "inspiration is mostly perspiration;" then George Francis Train, "citizen of the world," and friend of the children of New York, who, when he died a few years ago 3,000 children, with tears in their have to walk before it could run, and hearts and in their eyes, marched if it could not do the former it could around his grave and dropped a red carnation therein; William E. Gladstone, "the Grand Old Man of England," to whom he was presented by Arthur J. Balfour, and heard an inimitable speech in parliament from the great man; "the mother"-in our American homes—inspired by his visit in the home of the mother of Newell Dwight Hillis, the quaint, sweet, simple, good mother of the successor of Henry Ward Beecher; then last, the wonderful description of his meeting of Pope Leo XIII in the vatican at Rome, when he was given the apostolic blessing.

Preceding the lecture Sunday afternoon, Mrs. Pearl-Hutton-Schrader sang two selections. She fulfilled all expectations of her high ability, singing in a clear, firm tone of very pure quality. Nor does she have any trou-

Minor Legislation Will be Sidetracked in Effort to Reach Adjournment By Saturday, if Possible.

Washington, Aug. 12.-Congress is about to terminate a session that has now run more than 250 days. Since the organization of the government there have been only seven continuous sessions of great length.

Measured by the standard of new laws enacted, this one has not been fruitful of much general legislation; but from the standpoint of great is sues fought out and great policies outlined, it has been of more than usual interest.

Political activities have helped to prolong it, and political differences between the house and senate, the one Democratic and the other controlled by an independent element of the Republican party, have served to tie up appropriation bills and impede toe progress of much general legislation.

PACKAGE EXPLODED AND WOUNDED EMPLOYES.

Had Lain in Office "Unclaimed" Eight Months-Woman Tells Suspected Man's Name.

Greensboro, N. C., Aug. 12.-Startling disclosures indicate that an infernal machine which exploded in the High Point office of the Southern Express company was destined for a High Point society girl.

Revelations said to have been made by this young woman to the authorities have caused the police to search for a man who lived at Thomasville. N. C., who is said to have good bus! ness and social connections.

The inquiry, the authorities assert, has established the fact that the infernal machine, which severely wounded W. H. Bisbee, the express company manager, and his cashier, Alton Morton, when it exploded in the office, was sent from Thomasvide December 2

Expressmen made unsuccessful inquiry for the young woman and were on the point of consigning it to the 'unclaimed" heap when it exploded.

The young woman to whom the package was addressed conferred with the district attorney and declared that the man suspected became infuriated last fall when she refused to marry him. It is asserted he left the house in rage, saying he would send immediately by express trinkets which he held as presents from her. The box supposedly bearing the trinkets, the police allege, contained the bomb which exploded in the hands of the expressmen.

Thirty-Four Blazes in One House Within Few Hours.

FLAMES START WHILE MEN WATCH

Every Room in Building, From Cellar to Garret Has Been Scorched-Fire and Police Departments Puzzled.

Springfield, Mo., Aug. 12.-Thirty four fires in one building in less than one day have given the fire and police departments one of the deepest mysteries that ever confronted them.

Several times in the night the fire men were about to leave when a fresh blaze was discovered. About noon the fire department was again called to the scene and while Chief Mc Laughlin waited in his motor car af ter one blaze had been extinguished another broke out. The blaze was quickly extinguished, as were a dozen others discovered in as many places from the cellar to the roof of the building.

Watchman in Each Room.

A watchman is now stationed in each room ready to extinguish a fire or catch, if possible, the person who starts them.

The "house of mystery" at $19 Boonville street, is a dwelling of one and one-half stories, occupied on the first floor by two families and on the second floor by four roomers.

Mrs. J. W. Gum, lessee of the building, who sub-rents a part of the struc ture said: "We can't find what starts the fires. We have lived here two years and had no trouble. I haven't seen any of the blazes start, but I have goardian been awake 48 hours watching them extinguished."

Six Times in One Place. Every room in the house, the cellar M.; Ellen E. Fannon, curator. and the roof has been aftre and in one closet six blazes were discovered.

The building has seven rooms, three downstairs and four above. It Finley, administratrix. is one of the oldest in that part of the city. There is no insurance on the dwelling or contents. Objection to the structure is believed to offer a motive for the fires, but the means employed to start them is involved in mystery. The only clew that has been obtained was found when searchers discovered half a dozen burned matches in a closet. The house had been previously swept from cellar to garret and no matches found.

Child is Watched. Mrs. J. W. Gum admitted to the police that her six-year-old daughter had at one time possessed a mania for lighting matches. The child has been under the eves of the police and many believe that she may have been the incendiary. This slight clew, however, is refuted by the fact that 16 of the fires started in a few minutes executrix. and that the child was with her moth-Dysart, administrator C. T. DON'T BE CREATURE OF HABIT

It is Better to Make Some Blunders Than to Oscillate Always in a Groove.

It is a good plan to break one's habts occasionally, to see that it can still be done. To follow even the best of habits too closely tends to ossify existence. It makes one stiff. It narrows his tastes. The retired farmer who still gets up before daylight every morning, so as to get an early start waiting for bedtime, would be much better off if during the stress of life he had broken his babit occasionally and slept until nine o'clock.

The city man who lets the street, the flat, the office grind become an unbearable habit loses all his elasticity. Recently a brother and sister were found in an eastern state who had lived on the same farm for sixty years, and during that time had not been ten miles from home. For thirty years the woman had not been to town, five miles away, and for 15 years, although well and strong, she had not been so far from the house as the branch in their bottom field. Habits of life like this become prison chains. One must do some things the same way or nearly the same to learn to do them well, but once having acquired the skill of repetition, it is well to break away and do it some other way. It is better to make some blunders and get some knocks experi-menting than to oscillate in a groove until freedom ends .- Collier's Weekly.

PAYING FOR HIS IMPATIENCE

Next Time It Is Likely That Patrick Devlin Will Wait for the Jury's Decision.

If Patrick Devlin of Lawrence. Mass., were not such an impatient man he would be free joday. Instead he is locked up at the state farm, Bridgewater, for an indefinite period.
Patrick was on trial at Salem before a jury, charged with drunkenness. All the evidence was in and the jury retired. After a while Patrick be-came fidgety. The longer the jury stayed out the more impatient he be-

Finally he arose and said:

Your honor, I would like to change my plea from not guilty to guilty." The change was noted by the clerk. Suddenly the door opened and the jury trooped back into court.

What say you, Mr. Foreman and gentlemen of the jury, is the defendant guilty or not guilty?" asked the clerk

'Not guilty!" replied the foreman. Patrick was crestfallen. Having changed his plea, he had to take his medicine. Although the jury said that he was not drunk, Patrick said that he was drunk, and so the court dethan the jury

Mysterious Cave Dwellers.

The sentiment that accompanies the common desire for the preservation of historical relics of the American Indians, who are fast passing away or being merged into the civilization of a new century, is now being manifested in reference to the preservation of the home of the cliff-dwelling Indians, whose history is as mysterious and unrecorded as that of the tost tribes of Israel. Various theories have been propounded regerding the cliff dwellers. Le ends have it that they are the descendants of Montezuma. The popular theory is that the Indians began by living in caves, the homes that nature had provided, and then, with the natural ingenuity of man, proceeded to excavate caves high up in the side of the cliffs, where they might be safeguarded from attacks and premacy would go unchallenged. Americans know very little of the his tory of the cliff dwellers or of the place where they formerly lived. the Indians know, they do not tell .--

All Were Once Slang.

If we had never allowed slang to legitimize itself in orthodox language where should we be today? A reference to old slang dictionaries the answer. Take Grose's, published at the end of the eighteenth centurythe "Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue," by the first lexicographer who recognized the word "slang" itself. We find him classing under it such words as bay window, bedizened, bet, bluster, budget, brogue, capon, grouse, churl, coax, cobbler, cur, domineer, eyesore, flabby, flog, flout, foundling, fuss, gag malingerer, messmate, slump, saunter, sham, rascal, trip and yelp. Wait until next the anti-slang purist uses of these words and then confound him by reference to Grose.

Nell of the Mountains

By LOUISE MERRIPIELD

"Where's Nell?" Burt Sims reined shortly at the wide mill opening. Old Farley waited till the saw had cut through the heart of the great cedar before he came forward.

"Been up ter the house?" She ain't there. You seen her go by, Tinkum?"

Tinkum lay flat down in the saw dust, making roadways. "Mebbe she's after laurel," he vouchsafed. "She es down to the gap after some every night after supper.

Burt pressed his knees against the sorrel mare's sides and she sprang forward over the rough wooden bridge and down the road to the gap. On the rock embankment above the railroad he found her, sweet and dainty as the mountain laurel that grew in great shrubs of pink bloom in the gray rock crags and crannies.

And he told her why he had come, point blank, roughly, without hesi-tancy or doubt as to the outcome, while Nell dropped her head and smiled. Lately she had become somewhat of a connoisseur in love-making.
"So I thought I'd better tell you," finished up Burt. "I've got this call down to Rocking Stone, and I won't be back soon, and your father thinks we'd better marry before I go."

"Well, I reckon I won't marry you, Burt, not yet awhile," Nell laughed. Before he could ask why, there had come the long call of whistle down the gap, and she lifted her head as if to meet it.

Burt watched her, saw her color rise, and her eyes shine, as the express thundered into view, and he also saw the engineer lean out of the cab window, and toss something at her feet.

It was a small box, well wrapped and weighted with a lump of coal. "You might as well open it up,

Nell," he said roughly. "You're found out. "I don't care," flashed back Nell.

"I ain't a bit afraid of you." broke the cord and opened up the box. inside lay a dark leather case, and under its cover-Nell gave a gasp of

"Then what?" "Then, then I always watched for

"I won't. You and all the men up here are just the same. A woman ain't no more to you than your hound, not as much as your horse. Ain't I seen my mother slave and grow old without a decent word from month end to month end? Ain't I seen her licked sometimes, too, before I was old enough to fight dad? Suppose I'm going to stay here in these mountains and be the wife of one of you? Her young laughrang out triumphantly. She slipped the ring on her third finger, and held it to her lips. "I'm going to marry Ned Rowan, and mighty soon,

The tall, lean young mountaineer watched her with half-closed eyelids, and closed lips.

"Are you? You'll have to be quick about it, Nell." He turned the mare's head. "'Cause he sin't going to run

'Burt, wait!" He did not turn his head at her call. She watched him ride away toward home. It was just sunset. The whole range of mountains seemed built of magical precious stones and ramparts of gold in the strange, vivid radiance. The girl stood gazing out at it all; not the dark line of the mountains, but the sky and its glory. She loved the sunset hour that had brought her from lint. Democrat-Forum. for weeks the only romance and joy that had ever come into her life. She had been born and bred in the old lumber mill, child of wearled. taciturn mountain folk. Only little Tinkum had cheered her. Perhaps her mother had caught a gleam of some different world in the glory the sunsets and had bequeathed a hidden heart longing to her daughter Nell never knew. Her mother still worked on at the mill house, slender, stoop-shouldered, close-lipped woman, with only her eyes to betray her; great, lustrous, hungry eyes like Nell's; dark hazel, like the mountain brooks in shadow. That night Nell told her mother, showed her Ned's letters-manly, ten der letters-showed her the ring and asked what she should do. Mrs. Furley cried stlently, and held her girl close to her breast.

"Dearle, dearle, I don't know," she said. "I only want you to be happy. Burt Sims won't make you a good husband. I saw him kick his horse, even. If you've got a chance to get away, I mustn't hold you. Mountain life's a living death for the women olks, Nell. You'd better go, and I'll help you."

And what about father?" "He'll take it out on me, dearle, and it won't hurt you."

"I'll send for you and Tinkum, sure nother," Nell promised, passionately, "I won't forget, but I'm going sure tomorrow

Ned had written to her he would leave his engine at the first town above the gap with another engineer, ride back on the up local and meet her at the little wayside station two miles from the mill. Wrapped in her mother's long cloak, Nell stole away at sunset. And half-way down the mountain she saw the smoke from the burning bridge. Burt had kept his word. He had set fire to trestles, and it would be the last trip of Ned's train through the gap.

Nell sped down the rough road to the tracks, then on to the bridge The fire was eating away the supports, but light footed as a deer she an over it to the far side, half choking with the smoke and heat, her cloak held to her face.

And when the express whistle sounded around the mountain curve. she stood in the center of the track, waving the old cloak above her head to save Ned's life, and hundreds more, from the death plunge down on rocks in the rapids under the

Ned forgot the crowd as he held her in his arms before them, and som how the news of the elopement leaked out, as Nell told her story. When one of Ned's pals in the train crew brought them a hatful of bills and silver, Nell refused the gift blushing. "I didn't do it for anybody special,

"It's to start the honeymoon with, little girl," they told her, and Nell knew the message of the sunset to her had been right. Freedom and golden happiness lay in the promise of its glory, beyond the rim of the

Cat's Diet of Chicken to Go On, and Owner Would Settle at the Market Price.

When summer cat and chicken time come neighbors fall out who at other seasons live together in sweet accord. In a nearby suburb a handsome white cat was the pride of a well kept establishment, where he was the only kind of live stock permitted to exist.

Next door they kept chickens, which seemed to the family who had nothing of the sort a little low. Of course these remarks were not made in tone that would carry over the welltrimmed hedge, and relations were quite friendly until fluffy little chickens began to crawl through the hedge to eat the nice bugs in the neighbor's flourishing flower garden.

They never returned to tell how luscious was this food, for the large white cat, seeing these tempting mor-sels, claimed them for his own.

Angry passions were let loose, and it seemed as if peace would never be restored between the respective owners of cat and chickens, when the cat owner had a happy thought.

"How much are those worth?" he demanded. They are worth at least twenty-five

"Well, twenty-five cent chickens are none too good for my cat. He shall live on chicken if he chooses and I will pay the bill."

Best Yield Near Hopkins.

The highest reported yield in the county was made by Henry Russell, two miles south of Hopkins. He had a crop averaging fifty-one and onehalf bushels to the acre. Earl Hopper of Elmo got forty-four bushels to the acre from a small tract and thrashed 2,180 bushels from sixty-seven acres.

Boone county has marketed about 125,000 bushels. One milling company alone has handled 80,000 bushels. Many yields of twenty-five bushels to the acre were reported in this county.

G. A. Betteridge of Bunceton has one of the best yields in that county He had fourteen acres which averaged thirty bushels to the acre. A. J. Nelson and E. P. Harned also had good yields.

Rev. Bishop S. C. Partridge of Kansas City addressed a large audience at the Chautauqua Sunday afternoon. His lecture, "Life Among the Chipect. Bishop Partridge went outside the beaten pathways of stories of travel and history to tell of the intinate, personal happenings in the lives of the Chinese which are very seldom heard of by outsiders.

To begin with, Bishop Partridge said that of the 400,000,000 Chinese not one of them knows of or has ever heard of China. The name is unknown to them and untranslatable into their tongue because of the fact that they have no proper nouns in their language. Every name means something, and the Chiwent into the regular service again as nese call their country the Middle Kingdom. > Bishop Partridge described the Chinese wedding rather minutely, at the same time saying the topic was inex haustable. Among other things he told of the ceremony, which lasts for sev enty-two hours; of the tense dramatic and often tragic situations in those weddings, where the bride and groon see each other for the first time after the ceremony is over, and of the wedding presents, which consist of noth ing but cash, which is used to pay the expenses of the wedding.

The Chinese do not look at death a we do. They consider their dead as still a part of the family. They be lieve that the body contains three souls, one of which goes to the spirit world, another to the ancestral tablet and the last stays in the coffin or "long life box," and walks at night. After the body is put in the coffin, which is made of a tree trunk, it is left in the house for from one week to three years. In fact, it is not allowed to be taken away from the house if the famlly owes any rent.

These caskets are not buried in the ground, but are enclosed in small brick or wooden houses. The Chinese believe that the spirit can pass through wood but not through brick, o in the brick houses a hole in the shape of the word "spirit" is made, through which the spirit goes every night. It is very necessary that the spirit be back before daylight. This act furnishes a method for the carrying on of family feuds. One family will go to the burial place of the other and fill the hole in the little house with mortar, shutting the spirit in The enraged spirit then brings all manner of bad luck on its own family. If the cause is discovered the case is finally brought before the magistrate and settled

Dr. Robert Parker Miles, newspaper nan, magazine writer, lecturer and Presbyterian minister of New York City, held a splendid audience Sunday night in a splendid way. His lecture on "Tallow Dips" was a perfect piece of dramatic literature, and was pre sented with the fine action it demanded and received.

Dr. Miles was led to use the title of Tallow Dipe" for his lecture by a isit to the home of a friend on the garret, where he browsed around in elight among the old things there, and his mind lived for awhile with the peode who had used them. Among the old things was a candlestick with a mall piece of a tallow dip in it, where had been snuffed out, and it reninded him of what his old schoolnaster in England said to him and his lassmates, when they were small

"You are like tallow dips in a any account to the world you must burn and burn to the very socket."

"There is no easy way to eminence and those who win such a place swear the most," the speaker said. He mentioned in rapid succession the names of many "Tallow Dips" who had in all ages made worthy names, speaking of the Nazarene as "The Great Light of the World.

BANK ROBBERY WAS KEPT SECRET

New York, Aug. 12.-It has just been learned that private detectives are working on a $72,000 bank rob bery, which occurred in the heart of the financial section two months ago, but which has not been openly reported.

Skilled cracksmen entered a bank building by way of a coal hole, dug through a thick ceiling and bored into a steel vault, where they helped themselves to $72,000 in bills. A safe in a corner of the vault, which the burgfars apparently overlooked, is said to have contained at the time more than $8,000,000 in bills and coin.

Had Lain in Office "Unclaimed" Eight Months-Woman Tells Suspected Man's Name.

Greensboro, N. C., Aug. 12.-Starting disclosures indicate that an infernal machine which exploded in the High Point office of the Southern Express company was destined for a High Point society girl.

Revelations said to have been made by this young woman to the authorities have caused the police to search for a man who lived at Thomasville. N. C., who is said to have good bus! ness and social connections.

The inquiry, the authorities assert, has established the fact that the infernal machine, which severely wounded W H. Bisbee, the express company manager, and his cashier, Alton Morton, when it exploded in the office, was sent from Thomasvide Deuiry for the young woman and were n the point of consigning it to the 'unclaimed" heap when it exploded.

Springfield, Mo., Aug. 12 .- Thirty four fires in one building in less than one day have given the fire and police departments one of the deepest mys teries that ever confronted them.

Mrs. J. W. Gum admitted to the police that her six-year-old daughter had at one time possessed a mania for lighting matches. The fire in the roof of the building was evidently not the child's work.

It is Better to Make Some Blunders Tuan to Oscillate Always in a Groove.

It is a good plan to break one's habits occasionally, to see that it can still be done. To follow even the best of habits too closely tends to ossify existence. It makes one stiff. It nar-rows his tastes. The retired farmer who still gets up before daylight every morning, so as to get an early start waiting for bedtime, would be much better off if during the stress of life he had broken his habit occasionally and slept until nine o'clock.

The city man who lets the street, the flat, the office grind become an unbearable habit loses all his elasticity. Recently a brother and sister were found in an eastern state who had lived on the same farm for sixty years, and during that time had not been ten miles from home. thirty years the woman had not been to town, five miles away, and for 15 years, although well and strong, she had not been so far from the house as the branch in their bottom field Habits of life like this become prison chains. One must do some things the same way or nearly the same to learn to do them well, but once having acquired the skill of repetition, it is well to break away and do it some other way. It is better to make some blun ders and get some knocks experi-menting than to oscillate in a groove until freedom ends .- Collier's Weekly.

PAYING FOR HIS IMPATIENCE

Next Time It Is Likely That Patrick Devlin Will Wait for the Jury's Decision.

If Patrick Devlin of Lawrence. Mass., were not such an impatient man he would be free today. Instead he is locked up at the state farm, Bridgewater, for an indefinite period. Patrick was on trial at Salem be-fore a jury, charged with drunkenness. All the evidence was in and the jury retired. After a while Patrick be came fidgety. The longer the jury stayed out the more impatient he be-

Mysterious Cave Dwellers.

The sentiment that accompanies the common desire for the preservation of historical relics of the Amer can Indians, who are fast passing away or being merged into the civilization of a new century, is now being manifested in reference to the preservation of the home of the cliff-dwelling Indians, whose history is as mysterious and unrecorded as that of the tost tribes of Israel. Various theories have been propounded regerding the cliff dwellers. Le ends have it that they are the descendants of Monte-zuma. The popular theory is that the Indians began by living in caves, the homes that nature had provided, and then, with the natural ingenuity of man, proceeded to excavate caves high up in the side of the cliffs. from attacks and where their supremacy would go unchallenged. Americans know very little of the history of the cliff dwellers or of the place where they formerly lived. If the Indians know, they do not tell .-

All Were Once Slang.

If we had never allowed slang to legitimize itself in orthodox language where should we be today? A reference to old slang dictionaries gives Take Grose's, published at the end of the eighteenth century-the "Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue," by the first lexicographer who recognized the word "slang" itself. We find him classing under it such words as bay window, bedizened, bet, bluster, budget, brogue, capon, grouse, churl, coax, cobbler, cur, domineer, eyesore, flabby, flog, flout, foundling, fuss, gag malingerer, messmate, slump, saunter, sham, rascal, trip and yelp. Wait until next the anti-slang purist uses one of these words and then confound him by reference to Grose.

Nell of the Mountains

By LOUISE MERRIFIELD

"Where's Nell?" Burt Sims reined up shortly at the wide mill opening. Old Farley waited till the saw had cut through the heart of the great cedar before he came forward.

"Been up ter the house?" "She ain't there. You seen her go by, Tinkum?"

Tinkum lay flat down in the saw-dust, making roadways. "Mebbe she's after laurel," he vouchsafed. "She goes down to the gap after some every night after supper."

Burt pressed his knees against the sorrel mare's sides and she sprang forward over the rough wooden bridge and down the road to the gap. On the rock embankment above the railroad he found her, sweet and dainty as the mountain laurel that grew in great shrubs of pink bloom in the gray rock crags and crannies.

And he told her why he had come, point blank, roughly, without hesi-tancy or doubt as to the outcome, while Nell dropped her head and smiled. Lately she had become somewhat of a connoisseur in love-making.

"So I thought I'd better tell you," finished up Burt. "I've got this call down to Rocking Stone, and I won't be back soon, and your father thinks we'd better marry before I go."
"Well, I reckon I won't marry you,

Burt, not yet awhile," Nell laughed. Before he could ask why, there had come the long call of the engine whistle down the gap, and she lifted her head as if to meet it.

Burt watched her, saw her color rise, and her eyes shine, as the express thundered into view, and he also saw the engineer lean out of the cab window, and toss something at her feet.

It was a small box, well wrapped and weighted with a lump of coal, "You might as well open it up,

Nell," he said roughly. "You're found

"I don't care," flashed back Nell. "I ain't a bit afraid of you." broke the cord and opened up the box. Inside lay a dark leather case, and inder its cover-Nell gave a gasp of almost frightened delight when she saw the ring imbedded in the white velvet. It was not a diamond, but three pearls, large as early peas they seemed to Nell, and beautiful as the dawn that she loved to watch melt the mist wreaths up and down the long valley

"How'd you get to know him, Nell?

Nell's chin went up defiantly. "I carried medicine for mother down to old Mis' Haynes. An' it was late. An' I took the railroad bridge way hadn't seen me, and slowed up in

"Then what?" "Then, then I always watched for him."

"Watched for him, an' you don't even know his name.'

"I do so, Burt Sims. It's Ned Rowan. He's a Nashville fellow." "How do you know so much?" "He told me-I mean wrote it to

"I always told your pa it'd bring mischief letting you go down the valley to school. Give me the letters."

"I won't. You and all the men up here are just the same. A woman ain't no more to you than your hound, not as much as your horse. Ain't I seen my mother slave and grow old without a decent word from month end to month end? Ain't I seen her licked sometimes, too, before I was old enough to fight dad? Suppose I'm going to stay here in these mountains and be the wife of one of you? Her young laughrang out triumphantly. She slipped the ring on her third finger,

"Are you? You'll have to be quick about it, Nell." He turned the mare's "'Cause he ain't going to run that train over the gap again, not alive!

"Burt, wait!"

He did not turn his head at her call. She watched him ride away toward home. It was just sunset. The whole range of mountains seemed built of magical precious stones and ramparts of gold in the strange, vivid radiance. The girl stood gazing out at it all; not the dark line of the mountains, but the sky and its glory. She loved the sunset hour that had brought her for weeks the only romance and joy that had ever come into her life.

She had been born and bred in the old lumber mill, child of wearled, taciturn mountain folk. Only little Tinkum had cheered her. Perhaps her mother had caught a gleam of some different world in the glory of the sunsets and had bequeathed a hidden heart longing to her daughter Nell never knew. Her mother still worked on at the mill house, a slender, stoop-shouldered, close-lipped woman, with only her eyes to betray her; great, lustrous, hungry eyes like Nell's; dark hazel, like the mountain brooks in shadow.

That night Nell told her mother, showed her Ned's letters-manly, tender letters-showed her the ring and asked what she should do. Mrs. Farley cried silently, and held her girl close to her breast

"Dearie, dearie, I don't know," she said. "I only want you to be happy Burt Sims won't make you a good husband. I saw him kick his horse even. If you've got a chance to get away, I mustn't hold you. Mountain life's a living death for the women olks, Nell. You'd better go, and I'll 258 Red.

"And what about father?" "He'll take it out on me, dearle, and it won't hurt you."

"I'll send for you and Tinkum, sure, mother." Nell promised, passionately 'I won't forget, but I'm going sure omorrow.

Ned had written to her he would leave his engine at the first town above the gap with another engineer, ride back on the up local and meet her at the little wayside station two miles from the mill. Wrapped in her mother's long cloak, Nell stole away at sunset. And half-way down the mountain she saw the smoke the burning bridge. Burt had kept his word. He had set fire to the trestles, and it would be the last trip of Ned's train through the gap.

Nell sped down the rough road to the tracks, then on to the bridge. The fire was eating away the supports, but light footed as a deer she ran over it to the far side, half choking with the smoke and heat, her cloak held to her face.

And when the express whistle sounded around the mountain curve she stood in the center of the track, waving the old cloak above her head to save Ned's life, and hundreds more, from the death plunge down on the rocks in the rapids under the

Ned forgot the crowd as he held her in his arms before them, and some-how the news of the elopement leaked out, as Nell told her story. When one of Ned's pals in the train crew brought them a hatful of bills and silver, Nell refused the gift blushing.

"I didn't do it for anybody special, cepting Ned. I don't want any money,

"It's to start the honeymoon with, little girl," they told her, and Nell knew the message of the sunset to her had been right. Freedom and golden happiness lay in the promise of its glory, beyond the rim of the purple mountains.

Cat's Diet of Chicken to Go On, and Owner Would Settle at the Market Price.

When summer cat and chicken time come neighbors fall out who at other seasons live together in sweet accord In a nearby suburb a handsome white cat was the pride of a well kept estab lishment, where he was the only kind of live stock permitted to exist.

Next door they kept chickens, which seemed to the family who had nothing of the sort a little low. Of course these remarks were not made in a tone that would carry over the wellcoming home. An' the train came trimmed hedge, and relations were along, an' I'd been killed if he quite friendly until fluffy little chickto eat the nice bugs in the neighbor's flourishing flower garden.

They never returned to tell how luscious was this food, for the large white cat, seeing these tempting morsels, claimed them for his own.

Angry passions were let loose, and it seemed as if peace would never be restored between the respective owners of cat and chickens, when the cat owner had a happy thought.

"How much are those worth?" he demanded. "They are worth at least twenty-five
